TZARA

Luchar contra el anquilosamiento de las palabras moverlas disponiendo nuevas mallas sacudir la estructura del poema despertarlo
se trata de agarrar un objeto ver su nombre pesarlo medirlo olerlo observarlo darle libertad para que se manifieste para que se realice totalmente cambiar la decoración la situación de los muebles del salón de todos los días
la palabra corre y se adhiere aparece un grito una modulación un fondo de sentido se crea sonido de frases con los elementos volcados el fuego de las cosas que conocemos bajo otros aspectos valorar lo que tenemos llegar a exprimir el color y la forma de las letras unidas cuidar y dar vida al poema exhaustivo que creamos madurar la idea sobre la posibilidad lingüística conocer el léxico tanto que huelga la estrecha gramática las frases nacen limpias criticamos los versos con los versos demostrar nuestro convencimiento con la anarquía en la elección
cavilando nuevos programas saber qué se vierte sobre la hoja blanca aquí ahora poder columbrar nuestra diaria vida desconocida
la vida ceñida que desatamos hasta que auténtica se refleja en lo que no se limita a un modo que incumbe el total de mis actos que a modo de canto damos lúcidos porque se domina el oleaje y el calado de la semántica.

TZARA

Strive against the ankylosis of words move them about preparing new networks shake and jolt the structure of the poem
wake it up
it's about grabbing an object seeing its name weigh it measure it smell it observe it set it free so that it may manifest itself that it may totally realize itself change the decor the placement of furniture in the tired old room
the word flows and adheres a scream appears a modulation a depth of meaning a sounding of phrases is created with poured out elements the fire of things we know under other aspects value what we have get to wringing out the color and form from the linked letters attend to and give life to the exhaustive poem we create let the idea concerning linguistic possibility ripen know the lexicon until narrow grammar is made unnecessary phrases are born clean we evaluate the verses with verse demonstrate our conviction with anarchy in our choices
pondering new programs
know what is spilled upon the white page here, be able now to begin to see our daily unknown life
the tight-fitting life we loosen until it is authentically reflected in the unlimited in a way that affects the sum total of my acts that we lucidly deliver as a kind of song because the waves and the deep tides of semantics are in control.

Los humildes

Al que bulle en desafío y los manjares esparcidos; al que conoce la modestia del helecho, numen contrito; al que avergüenza la claridad del sol y baña su rostro en la ternura de las lágrimas; al que recorre las provincias más antiguas saludando con los brazos, mástil altivo; al que recuerda y sus labios ya no son buenos; al que amasa el pan de los días entonando migajas terrenales; al que se desvía por el frío, por el viento, por las olas o por el miedo; al que desprecia, y los ojos sellados; al que está seguro de su desastre;
al que teme las fuerzas desconocidas; al que abre la puerta todas las mañanas y espera encontrar un mirlo; al que mata y su cerbatana es recia al que de nombre tiene el grito de un pájaro y sus piernas aún aún caminan; al que es torturado por los buscadores de algo;
al que es horaño y los suyos comen raíces;
al que pasea una urraca atada a un cordel encontrado; al que posee una casa y un cerdo y una cabra y nada veloz en la charca de su vecino; al que es consagrado a las labores del amor y su vientre es estéril; al que corretea junto al arroyo, una zarza lacerando sus rodillas; al que oye la voz del dueño retumbar en los acantilados; al que es joven y sus espaldas anchas; al que descubre la vida bajo una piedra plana; al que bebe sangre, leche, grasa, y sus padres llaman mudo; al que se cobija en los matorrales, los demás riendo; al que da nombres a los arados, hachas, esteras y amigos; al que siempre está solo, una encina dibujada; al que lleva en los bolsillos trozos de papel, piedras de río y una sabandija; y al que el paso del tiempo le produce tedio, una mano enguantada.

The Humble Ones

To him who seethes in defiance and the scattered delicacies; to him who knows the modesty of the bracken fern, contrite numen; to him who is shamed by the clarity of the sun and bathes his face in the tenderness of tears; to him who goes about the most ancient provinces giving greetings with his arms, haughty flagstaff;
to him who remembers and his lips are no longer fine and good;
to him who kneads and rolls the daily bread intoning earthly crumbs; to him who turns away because of the cold, because of the wind, because of the waves or because of fear; to him who scorns, and his eyes closed tight;
to him who is certain of his own disaster;
to him who fears unknown forces; to him who opens the door every morning and expects to encounter a blackbird; to him who kills and his blowgun is harsh;
to him who has for a name the call of a bird and his legs still walk; to him who is tortured by the seekers of something or other;
to him who is antisocial and his loved ones eat roots; to him who strolls with a magpie tied to a found-by-chance string; to him who possesses a house and a pig and a nanny goat and swims fast in his neighbor's pond;
to him who is consecrated to the labors of love and his guts are sterile; to him who chases about the creek, a bramble lacerating his knees; to him who hears the voice of the master resound in the cliffs and crags; to him who is young and his shoulders broad;
to him who discovers life beneath a flat rock;
to him who drinks blood, milk, grease, and his parents call him dumb; to him who takes shelter in the thickets, the others laughing;
to him who bestows names to the plowshares, axes, floor mats and friends; to him who is always alone, a live oak sketched and drawn;
to him who carries in his pockets bits and pieces of paper, river rocks and a nasty bug; and to him in whom the passage of time produces tedium, one gloved hand.

Talpa

Ayer me fui de toperas, acechadas en estos días de otoño por panzudos ratoneros, pausados milanos rojos
y equilibrados cernícalos.

El aire que es festivo confunde
al espectador inexperto y fascina
al rutilante marido.
¡Qué posturas manifiestas!
¡Qué ademanes de prestigio! ¡Qué gloria!
nunca alcanzada! Los recios picos, las garras corvas, atrapan
las cabezas puntiagudas, destripan al minero pintoresco al concienzudo gran topo, impávido e inocente
en su labor
de huroneo.

Así
en estas mañanas
medito acerca del límite ese fiel concepto lábil que permite el recorrido de la oscuridad a la luz de lo sabido a lo ignoto, del calor al hielo, la fulgurante mudanza hacia una muerte, llena de chasquidos sordos y recios pelos arrancados.

Talpa

Yesterday I took to the molehills, surveilled in these October days by pot-bellied buzzards, suspended red kites
and steadily poised kestrels.

The air
which is festive confounds
the inexpert onlooker
and fascinates
the glittering husband.
What manifest postures!
What gestures of prestige!
What never arrived at glory! The robust, rigorous beaks, the curved talons, seize the sharp-pointed heads, gut the queer miner
the painstaking great mole, undaunted and innocent
in its labor
of nosing about.

So it is on these mornings
that I meditate upon the limín that tried and true labile concept that allows for the crossing from darkness to light from the known to the unknown, from heat to ice, the bright flashing movement toward a death, full of muffled crackings
and coarse, thick hair yanked out
