THE ANIMAL AT YOUR SIDE

MEGAN ALPERT
Airlie Press is supported by book sales and grants, by contributions to the press from its supporters, and by the work donated by all the poet-editors of the press.

Copyright © 2020 Megan Alpert

All Rights Reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in whole or in part without the written permission of the publisher except in the context of reviews or critical writing.

Cover Art: "Grafted, Expected to Take" by Sara Everett Book Design: Beth Ford, Glib Communications & Design
https://bethford.design

First Edition
ISBN: 978-1-950404-05-6
Library of Congress Control Number: 2019957028
Printed in the United States of America
“She had the boy-girl body of a flower, moving once and for all past the hermetic front door.”

-Medbh McGuckian
<table> <thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Dawn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>What We Kept</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>The Wolf That Never Comes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>My Aunt the Artist, the Liar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>A Guide</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Deer Skull</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Reporting From Oil Block 16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>In Wolf Country</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Unsettled</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>My Mother, Telling Stories</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>The Route Back</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Caught</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Ravenous</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Seattle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Motherless</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Live-In</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Remember</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>See-Through</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Seven Years</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Song in a Box</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>How to Return</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Island</td>
</tr> </tbody>
</table>
My sister comes home smelling of dirt she was buried in, dandelion milk under her nails.

We wash her arms,
scrub her fingers
with stinging soap, but still she is not clean.

When she finally speaks,
it’s hand me that trowel and I’ll bury the seeds

while upstairs our grandmother paces the attic.

Will I wake anywhere
besides this house, or love anyone ever beyond my sister with the skinned knees?

I wake again in the garden crushing stems against my teeth.
We kept the war under our tongues kept it in our hamstrings in our bones.
We kept the war in our cereal bowls in our juice kept it in our first love standing in the porch light waiting to be kissed.
We kept it close in the hems of our shirts our face cream kept it in our bad skin.
We kept it in our driveways sitting quiet in the yard flying the Bronx River Parkway, 2 a.m., kept it in key rings smashed into tables, the imprints they left on our palms.
We kept it door-to-door
moss-green in hinges.
Kept it mean
under our fingernails forgotten in our socks—

Sometimes we stood at the edge of a blueberry field, birds lit by the last of the sun
but under our skin
the whirr-click of the war beginning . . .
The wolf would like a wife

All summer buzzed me awake, the uncontrollable throats of the daffodils open in the yard—

The wolf would like to claw

Inert lawns, torpid houses, no door swung open,

no pane unlatched—

He would like to set her up against the headboard

Petals or stones against my window, flitting, uncatchable.

And the waiting clawed off me—

He would like to lick

Perhaps a far-off howl, perhaps closer three clear notes—

The wolf would like the pink skin tender, he would like to gnarl,
he would like to lick

The dark was soft. It ate against my skin.

THE WOLF THAT NEVER Comes
On the path behind the house, we found the teeth, but no sign of the corresponding jaw—whatever had been forced down to earth had been knocked or dragged elsewhere.

My aunt rattled the teeth in her cupped palm. Sunlight dropped a dryness in my mouth—she was not the kind to tell the truth.

A woman, she said, the teeth were small, like from a woman's mouth, and she knelt, pulled down to earth, her fingers nosed the dirt for further proof.

(My aunt’s little rented piece of earth, a house to make her crazy paintings in.)

They weren’t animal teeth. I ran my tongue along the blank spots in my mouth.

She’d try them in her own mouth at parties, she told me later, cradling my jaw,

Little one, we rent ourselves from earth.

MY AUNT THE ARTIST, THE LIAR
A GUIDE

Must have walked too quickly or eaten the breadcrumbs dirty—must have left the path.

(When the thing left for dead rises and walks, what is the map she leaves?)

The evening news will call the rest of her “the body.”
What rises is different:
half-animal, looks out the sides of its eyes.

No,
she has gone back for her body.
Visit the original scene. Nothing left but a hollowed-out rut in the leaves.
Coyote chased her down.
Deer treed herself well through upstate New York—she was equal to it.
The fire coming out
her eye-holes, nose-holes?
The orange that glows
when the woods are gone.

DEER SKULL
We rode to the oil camp in the back of a pickup on the road that had scared away the animals. He said his story on the electric company had been pulled, and we talked corruption. “De hecho,” he said, “I was a pastor. A year ago my wife me engañó y no pude seguir. Mi corazón . . .” (in Spanish, you can say this to a stranger), “¿No se siente bien?” I finally tried. “No,” he smiled, looking down, “no, it doesn’t feel good.” My back hurt from the weight of the tape recorder, the air of the forest lit us up: wells and pipelines hidden behind trees whose names and uses we did not know.
I give you what the wolves left:
a tooth on a leather strap, a few stray hairs I found stuck to a tree, skull of a deer the dogs found and licked clean.

Wild dogs, you say, coyotes, not wolves. You want to transition without symbols. I trace the sickle scars where your breasts were, where no one has ever touched you yet.

They shine in the moonlight—streetlight—through the window. Later, I thumb the hairs on your razor and press

my cheek to the rough place they came from. Sorry, you say, I’ll shave again, and I watch through the mirror as you file the points down from your teeth.
UNSETTLED

My friend and I went to the lake, found a skull and took it home. Washed it, set it out to dry on the shed roof in the sun. Still my mother saw it, shuddered. We buried it in the backyard underneath the compost heap. Now my dinner tastes like bones.

The backyard pile of rotted wood we’d pull apart to see the bugs. We turned a plank into a table. My friend came to and to the house. We made a stew of broken rocks. My parents would not eat the bones (or lick the bones or love the bones).

We knew that there had been a war, and after that there was a manor; then it all became this town. Lenape, Wappinger, and butlers thundered through and through the woods. Sleepless, scared, we’d dig and listen: shards of them the earth churned up, to us, we thought, to us.
Her trowel scraped bone. My sternum ached with little seeds.

She patched the overlayer. Said, Go down into the earth, the only place I will not follow. Then rose, skeletal from my bed. I lay awake in the froglight. A collection of piano notes hung outside.

I rode them.